

FINANCIAL AID

MIT makes financial support available to graduate students from a variety of sources and in several different forms—fellowships, scholarships, traineeships, teaching and research assistantships, on-campus employment, and federal loans. Many forms of support are granted solely on the basis of merit, while others are granted on the basis of financial need or a combination of merit and need.

Unfortunately, neither a department nor the Institute itself has the financial resources to provide support for all deserving students. Thus, we advise all prospective students explore sources of aid available outside MIT, to find means of financing their graduate programs.

Information on fellowships and other financial aid resources (<https://oge.mit.edu/student-finances>) is available from individual departments as well as from the Office of Graduate Education (OGE). Information on graduate student loans (<https://sfs.mit.edu/graduate-students/loans/loans>) is available on the Student Financial Services (SFS).
