The cost of attendance for the 2022–2023 academic year is $79,850. This number is actually much lower than what it costs MIT to educate students. However, most students pay far less than the total cost of attendance because of our need-based financial aid. A detailed estimate of the cost of attendance (prior to financial aid) is provided by Student Financial Services.

Key points:

- Tuition is prorated if a student withdraws.
- In addition to tuition, there may be fees that are also charged each term, such as the student activity fee.
- All students automatically receive basic medical coverage through MIT Medical as part of their tuition. Additional medical coverage for the student and/or families is available through the MIT Student Extended Insurance Plan.

See Student Health Insurance and Medical Requirements for further information.